Sunday on CNN's "Fareed Zakaria GPS," Presidents Richard Nixon and President Gerald Ford's former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said President-elect Donald Trump is "unique" among presidents in the fact that "he has absolutely no baggage. He has no obligation to any particular group."

Kissinger said, "This president-elect is the most unique that I have experienced in one respect, he has absolutely no baggage. He has no obligation to any particular group because he has become a president on the basis of his own strategy and a program he put before the American public that his competitors did not present. So that is a unique situation."
