WASHINGTON, July 22—American bankers today expressed the hope that the two superpowers could avert a financial crash by agreeing to a temporary extension of credits for raw materials. They said that the only way to avoid a sudden crash was to reach some understanding on which a financial faction based.

The sentiment was expressed by a group of prominent bankers, who assembled here today for a conference on the financial situation in the world. They were concerned about the current financial turmoil and the potential for a global crisis.

"We must find a way to stabilize the financial system," one of the bankers said. "We cannot afford a sudden crash that could cause widespread economic disruption."

The bankers also discussed the need for increased cooperation between nations to address the economic challenges they face. They emphasized the importance of maintaining open trade channels and working together to find solutions to common problems.

"We must work together to create a more stable financial environment," another banker stated. "We cannot afford to be divided on these issues."
