Hjalmar Schacht made up his mind about Stalin quite early in the war. The The Times.co.uk, in its column on "German Wages and Work," wrote in 1941 that Schacht was the best of Jews for the time being. Schacht had been weighted with the innumerable responsibilities which had been too large for others. His conduct of the money market and his handling of the currency problem had enabled Schacht to win the respect of the country. Schacht was the man who had been responsible for the financial stabilization of Germany. Schacht had been the man who had been responsible for the financial stabilization of Germany.
