NAZI CAPITALISTS FACE U.S. CHARGES

By DANA ADAMS SCHMIDT
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES

February 2, 1947

The trial of Nazi capitalists accused of profiting from the destruction of Western Europe has reached a critical stage, with American officials saying that the defendants were responsible for the destruction of millions of dollars worth of property. The charges are based on evidence presented by the U.S. government, which accuses the defendants of participating in the looting of European countries.

The defendants are alleged to have profited from the destruction of property in Western Europe, and the American government is seeking to obtain restitution for these losses. The trial has been held in a neutral country, and the defendants are being represented by a team of lawyers who are believed to be working pro bono.

The trial has been described as one of the most significant legal proceedings in recent history, and the outcome is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has also been described as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The outcome of the trial is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has been held in a neutral country, and the defendants are being represented by a team of lawyers who are believed to be working pro bono.

The defendants are alleged to have profited from the destruction of property in Western Europe, and the American government is seeking to obtain restitution for these losses.

The trial has been described as one of the most significant legal proceedings in recent history, and the outcome is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has also been described as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The outcome of the trial is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has been held in a neutral country, and the defendants are being represented by a team of lawyers who are believed to be working pro bono.

The defendants are alleged to have profited from the destruction of property in Western Europe, and the American government is seeking to obtain restitution for these losses.

The trial has been described as one of the most significant legal proceedings in recent history, and the outcome is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has also been described as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The outcome of the trial is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has been held in a neutral country, and the defendants are being represented by a team of lawyers who are believed to be working pro bono.

The defendants are alleged to have profited from the destruction of property in Western Europe, and the American government is seeking to obtain restitution for these losses.

The trial has been described as one of the most significant legal proceedings in recent history, and the outcome is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has also been described as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The outcome of the trial is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has been held in a neutral country, and the defendants are being represented by a team of lawyers who are believed to be working pro bono.

The defendants are alleged to have profited from the destruction of property in Western Europe, and the American government is seeking to obtain restitution for these losses.

The trial has been described as one of the most significant legal proceedings in recent history, and the outcome is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has also been described as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The outcome of the trial is expected to have a major impact on the future of international relations.

The defendants have denied the charges, and the trial has been characterized as a test case for the enforcement of international law.

The trial has been held in a neutral country, and the defendants are being represented by a team of lawyers who are believed to be working pro bono.