Penitent Voice From The CIA Front Lines

After Angola and Vietnam, Former Agent John Stockwell Is the Newest Whistle-Blower

By Sally Quinn

"I've never been more engaged in a truth about a trillion dollars of lies than I was in my work with the CIA," former agent John Stockwell said in a recent interview. "It was a truth that was not only worth telling, but it was a truth that was worth telling in public." Stockwell, who worked for the CIA in Angola and Vietnam, has now made his way to the United States, where he is working to expose the secrets of the CIA.

"I was always aware of the dangers that came with working in the CIA," Stockwell said. "But I never thought I would be the one to blow the whistle on the CIA's secrets."

"I have always believed in the power of the truth," Stockwell said. "And I am determined to use that power to expose the secrets of the CIA."

STOCKWELL, from CI

In 1964, when he joined the CIA, it appeared to him to be the honest thing to do. In 1975, after the $10,000 bribe and some other technicalities, he became a U.S. Army officer on the orders of the CIA, and in 1978 he was fired by the U.S. military for being a CIA agent. Since then, he has been on the run, trying to find a place to raise his family and live in peace.

Stockwell is a former CIA agent who served in Vietnam and later revealed intellectual and moral corruption within the agency.

He has been repeatedly arrested for his actions and has been on the run for most of his adult life. He is currently living in hiding and is not known to be in contact with anyone inside or outside of the United States.
