

HOAX ON NAZIS FEARED.

Dutch Publishers Find Author Is Not Warburg's Son.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 23.—A 100-page pamphlet entitled "The Resources of National Socialism: Three Conversations With Hitler," containing supposedly "sensational revelations" by a mysterious author named Sidney Warburg of New York, has appeared in Holland.

With the disclosure that the author of the pamphlet was not the son of Felix Warburg, the New York banker, as is asserted in the preface, the publishers of the booklet and the translator, J. G. Schoup, a Belgian newspaper man living in Holland, are wondering if they have not been the victims of a hoax. The pamphlet repeats an old story to the effect that leading Americans, including John D. Rockefeller, financed Hitler from 1929 to 1932 to the extent of $32,000,000, their motive being "to liberate Germany from the financial grip of France by bringing about a revolution." Many readers of the pamphlet have pointed out that it contains many inaccuracies.

[Felix Warburg said last night that he knew of no Sidney Warburg, but that he had been informed last week that the author had posed as a relative.]
